They went into the Church in the ſame Order in which they arrived, the Queen being conducted by two Senators, under a Canopy borne by Eight Preſidents, aſſiſted by Eight Captains, in the ſame Manner as the King's Canopy was borne.

On the Proceſſion's entering the Church, the Muſick began, and continued playing 'till all were placed.

The King was received by the Archbiſhop in his Cope, having the Anointing Horn in his Hand, and being attended by the other Biſhops in their Copes.

Upon his Majeſty's entering the Church, the Biſhop of Lindkioping pronounced the Words, Bleſſed be he, who cometh in the Name of the Lord; whereupon the Biſhop of Scara read a Prayer.

The King placed himſelf on his Throne.

The Archbiſhop, with Half of the Biſhops, went into the Choir, the Archbiſhop before the Altar, and the Biſhops on the Sides; while the Biſhop of Lindkioping, and the other Half of the Biſhops, received the Queen at the Church Door.

Her Majeſty being entered, the Biſhop of Lindkioping pronounced the Words, Bleſſed be ſhe, who cometh in the Name of the Lord; after which the next eldeſt Biſhop read a Prayer.

Her Majeſty being ſeated on the Throne prepared for her, all the reſt of the Biſhops went into the Choir.

A Chair of Silver was placed before the Altar, and before it a Stool, on which the Bible was laid.

The Senators, who carried the Regalia, placed themſelves cloſe by the Thrones.

The Senator, who carried the Standard of the Kingdom, ſtood on the Right Hand of the King, and the Princes on his Majeſty's Left Hand.

The other Senators were ſeated in the Choir upon Chairs with red Covers, and their Ladies oppoſite to them.

When firſt the Muſick ceaſed, Cuſhions were placed before their Majeſties, who kneeled on them to ſay their Prayers; which being over, the Senators, who carried the Regalia, went up and laid them upon the Altar.

When this was done the Service began, and, after ſinging a Pſalm, the Biſhop of Lindkioping preached a Sermon, taking his Text from the 9th Verſe of the Firſt Chapter of Joſhua; this was ſucceeded by chaunting the Creed and the Litany; and then the Coronation Muſick began again, during which the two Princes conducted the King from his Throne to the Altar.

His Majeſty being ſeated in the Silver Chair, and ſurrounded by all the Senators, and the Standard of the Kingdom being placed behind the Chair,

The Grand Chamberlain, aſſiſted by the other Chamberlains, took off the Mantle of Prince Royal, which the King wore, and it was laid upon the Altar; at the ſame the Archbiſhop, and the Preſident of the Chancery, took the Royal Mantle from the Altar, and put it upon the King's Shoulders; upon which his Majeſty kneeled before the Stool on which the Bible was laid: The Muſick ceaſed, and the Bible was opened by the Archbiſhop, at the Firſt Chapter of Joſhua.

The King then, laying three Fingers on the Bible, took his Coronation Oath, which was read by the Preſident of the Chancery, Baron von Duben, and delivered to him by the Chancellor of the Court, Baron Bunge: This ended, the Archbiſhop took the Anointing Horn, and, the King kneeling, he anointed his Majeſty's Forehead, Breaſt, Temples, and both Hands, repeating at the ſame Time the Prayer uſual on this Occaſion.

The Anointing being finiſhed, the King roſe, and ſeated himſelf in the Chair: Then the Senator Count Horn aſſiſted the Archbiſhop to take the Royal Crown from the Altar, and to place it on the King's Head, the Archbiſhop reading the Form of Prayer for this Ceremony.

After which the Senator Baron Reuterholm took the Sceptre from the Altar, which he, together with the Archbiſhop, delivered to the King, and another Prayer was read.

All

All the other Regalia were brought to his Majeſty in the ſame Manner.

The Ceremony of crowning the King being finiſhed, the Senator Grand Marſhal of the Court gave Notice to the Heralds, appointed for that Purpoſe, to proclaim, That Guſtavus the Third was now crowned King of Sweden and Gothland, with the Provinces thereunto belonging: He and No Other.

In the mean Time the Senator and Grand Court-Marſhal gave the Signal for the Firing to begin; upon which the Guns were fired from the Artillery and Admiralty, 112 Cannons from each; after which all the ſmall Arms of the Regiments, and of the Burghers of Stockholm, were alſo fired.

A Second Firing followed immediately in the ſame Order, and then the Heralds proclaimed, Long live King Guſtavus! The Organs and Muſick began, and a Pſalm of Thankſgiving was ſung by the Biſhop of Wexio. Afterwards the Biſhop of Abo chaunted a Prayer at the Altar, with the Bleſſing, and then the Muſick began again.

Immediately after the Bleſſing the King left the Chair, and went to his Throne, cloathed in the Coronation Mantle, with the Crown on his Head, the Sceptre in his Right Hand, and the Globe in his Left.

The King being ſeated on the Throne, the Senators, who had carried the Regalia of the Kingdom, placed themſelves before his Majeſty.

The Princes then went to conduct the Queen, and her Majeſty was placed in the Silver Chair.

The Princes, having conducted her Majeſty to the Coronation Chair, and aſſiſted her to kneel, and to riſe after the Anointing, returned to their Chairs.

The Senators, who had accompanied the Queen in the Proceſſion, ſurrounded her Majeſty, and the Standard of the Kingdom, borne by the Baron Ribbing, was ſtill behind the Chair.

Senator Arnell, with the Archbiſhop, took the Queen's Royal Mantle from the Altar, and put it upon her Majeſty's Shoulders, in which they were aſſiſted by the Ladies of her Majeſty's Bed Chamber: After which her Majeſty, kneeling down before the Bible, was anointed on the Forehead and Hands, a Prayer being read by the Archbiſhop as before. The Queen being again placed in the Chair, the Archbiſhop, aſſiſted by Senator Falkengren, took the Crown from the Altar, and placed it on her Majeſty's Head, repeating a Prayer as before.

All the other Regalia were brought in the ſame Manner to the Queen, as they had been before to the King; after which the Senator Ehrenſcrona directed the Heralds to proclaim, That Sophia Magdalena was crowned Queen of Sweden and Gothland: She and No Other.

The ſame Senator, as executing the Office of Grand Marſhal for the Day, ordered the Signal to be given for the Firing for the Queen, which was performed with Ninety Cannons of the Artillery, and the ſame Number of the Admiralty; which was followed by the ſmall Arms, as before.

A ſecond Firing followed immediately in the ſame Order; and then the Heralds proclaimed, Long live Queen Sophia Magdalena!

Then the Biſhop of Gottenburg read a Form of Prayer for the Occaſion, and having given the Bleſſing, the Muſick began again; during which her Majeſty returned to her Throne.

As ſoon as the Queen was ſeated on her Throne, his Majeſty returned to the Silver Chair, which was turned towards the Congregation, and then a Herald ſummoned the two Princes of Sweden to come forth, and take their Oath to his Majeſty; upon which their Royal Highneſſes left their Places, and, kneeling before his Majeſty, took their Oath, which was read by the Preſident of the Chancery. When the Princes were returned to their Chairs, the Preſident of the Chancery firſt, and the other Senators afterwards, were alſo ſummoned by the Heralds, and took their Oath in like Manner, kiſſing his Majeſty's Hand before they returned to their Places.

This being done, his Majeſty returned to his Throne as before; and the Princes went and ſaluted the Queen on her Cheek; after which the Senators kiſſed her Hand. A Pſalm of Thankſgiving was ſung, and, during the Muſick, which ſucceeded it, the Proceſſion began to move out of the Church in the ſame Order in which it had entered.

As ſoon as they were returned to the Palace, the King's Rent-Maſter, accompanied by Twelve of the Horſe-Guards, threw out Money to the Populace, and, when the Coaches and Horſes were gone Home, the Firing began again, firſt with 222 Cannons, and then with 180.

Several Hogſheads of Wine, and an Ox roaſted whole, were at the ſame Time diſtributed among the Populace.

About Nine o'Clock their Majeſties ſupped in Publick, in the Great Hall of the Kingdom, which was richly ornamented, and magnificently illuminated. There were two Tables, one for their Majeſties, the other for the Princes: Senator Count Horn preſented the Water to the King, and Senator Sparre the Napkin, to waſh his Hands.

The Senators Counts Gyllenſtiern and Beckfries performed the ſame Offices to the Queen.

Their Majeſties ſat at Table with their Crowns on their Heads, and the Royal Mantle on their Shoulders.

The Senator Count Beckfries performed the Office of Carver, and the Diſhes were brought to the Table by Colonels.

When Supper was over, and the Ceremony of Waſhing repeated, the Senators Reuterholm and Funk delivered the Sceptres and Globes again to their Majeſties, who went out of the Hall in Proceſſion, as they had come into it.

The Muſick began as ſoon as their Majeſties appeared in the Hall, and continued playing all the Time their Majeſties remained there.

After the Royal Supper was ended, Two Tables were ſerved for the Senators, and their Ladies, and one for the Foreign Miniſters, at which Baron Duben did the Honours as Preſident of the Chancery, and was aſſiſted by Senator Falkenberg, Counſellor of the Chancery, and his Lady, and alſo by Baron Bunge, Chancellor of the Court.

The Deputies of the States were at the ſame Time entertained in different Apartments of the Palace.

On Sunday Te Deum was ſung in the King's Chapel, and in the Evening there was a Court.

On Monday June 1. the Grand Ceremony was performed, of the States taking the Oath of Allegiance to the King, in a great Amphitheatre built for that Purpoſe in one of the Courts of the Palace, which was ſo well contrived, as to afford one of the fineſt Sights imaginable.
